

Is that a train wreck? Is that gridlock? In one sense it is gridlock. We have never had gridlock on the budget. When I started out, Republicans and Democrats agreed. Democrats did not want to control the growth of entitlements and Republicans didn't want to control the growth of defense spending. So they both agreed to pass budgets with large deficits.

These budgets with large deficits have been agreed to by both Republicans and Democrats, but you have this majority Congress agreeing that we are going to get our financial house in order. It is an unprecedented thing to have Congress say it wants to spend less. Usually Congress wants to spend more.

We do not intend to waste this opportunity that we have. We have been in the minority for 40 years. We are in the majority. It is under our watch, and we look forward to getting our financial house in order.

We will have gridlock until the White House recognizes that we are determined not to increase the debt ceiling, we are determined to balance the budget in 7 years, we are determined to have what we consider a very fair tax credit. But that gridlock will end when the President agrees to a 7-year budget using real numbers, not numbers cooked by OMB, and then the debate will be in my judgment how we spend those dollars and how we effect the tax cut.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for the opportunity to address the House.
